MOVING PICTURE FEATURES

If the reputation of D. W. Griffith depended on "The Penitents," the feature seen at the Temple Saturday, he would hardly be known. It is true that he did not direct the picture in person, but it bears his stamp of approval. Moving pictures, like Ford cars, require more than reputation to make them go. The announcement at the beginning of "The Penitents" that the feature was historically correct covered a multitude of shortcomings.

This afternoon and tonight Pauline Frederick will be seen in Clyde Fitch's drama "The Woman in the Case." The movie reviewer of the Chicago Herald thinks that the picture gives Miss Frederick a better opportunity to show her ability as an actress than she has yet had on the screen. In this picture she does not take the part of a vampire, but is seen in the part of a self-sacrificing wife, upsetting the traditions of stardom by choosing to play a minor role, leaving the most conspicuous role in the drama to Marie Chambers.

Tomorrow Kitty Gordon, she of the beautiful back, will be here again in a picture called "The Crucial Test."

ST. PHILIP'S CATHOLIC CHURCH

Tomorrow, August 15th, will be the feast of the assumption of the Blessed Virgin Mary. Services will be at 9 a. m. and at 5 p. m. All those who have any hope and confidence in the mother of Christ will be heartily welcomed to attend the services.

HIS FORESIGHT

By ERNESTINE COBB.

"Ah, this is the life!" Anne's tone and inflection expressed complete satisfaction, which was the result of her being settled in a brand-new three-room apartment. The wicker furniture, cretonne hangings, woven cotton rugs, and fragile teacups were the things Anne had not found in her varied experience in boarding houses, though they were the things for which her soul and body, too, had yearned.

She turned her eyes lovingly from one object to another all about the cheerful living room. The cup of tea she had just finished had banished the fatigue of her day's work at school.

Suddenly her serenity gave way to a puzzled expression. She bent her head listening to a song that seemed to come from the adjoining apartment and seemed to contain something about somebody of the name of Anne. As the song was repeated at irregular intervals, Anne made out the following words:

"How old is Anne? Don't ask me, man; But, be she five or fifty, I'm sure with me you will agree That Anne is rather nifty!"

"Of all the nerve!" thought Anne, as she first caught the words. Then she laughed a bit sheepishly as she reflected that the singer did not know of her existence, much less of her name.

She seated herself at the piano, which was her chief luxury and companion. Just as she was ready to lay her hands upon the keys to play the old-time melodies for which her present mood called, once more there came to her that insistent singer's untrained baritone mumbled the doggerel about Anne.

As she listened to the now familiar air, she began unconsciously to play a soft accompaniment to it. Not until an abrupt silence followed the closing words of the stanza did she fully realize what she had done.

She wondered whether the young man were listening, too. Then she wondered why she thought of him as a young man, but finally decided that neither his age nor his identity were of interest to her, she tossed her head indifferently and began to improvise music suited to her mood. Consternation overcame her a moment later when she found herself playing that chugging accompaniment in a spirited way, and realizing that the singer had boldly taken up the words and was singing gayly to her accompaniment. She stopped short in the midst of it and broke giddily into a Dvorak "Humoresque."

Anne was to be a dinner guest that evening of her Cousin Emily Mason. Mrs. Mason had telephoned Anne the night before to look her prettiest as the guests would include a charming bachelor architect and a rising young lawyer, while Anne would be the youngest and prettiest girl present. Anne smiled as she remembered her cousin's bantering words, and she went from the piano to the closet and took out her only two evening gowns. One was a soft, pale green charmeuse and the other a fluffy black net. She decided to wear the pale green gown. An hour afterward she was at the door of the Masons.

"You're a dream, Anne," whispered her cousin, as the long black coat was removed. "If you don't set the lawyer or the architect to dreaming of you, I'm no prophet."

John Moore, the architect, proved to be fat, florid and forty. Edgar Worth, the lawyer, was slender and strong, possibly thirty, but with the twinkle of a boy of twenty in his brown eyes. Edgar Worth took Anne in to dinner, and John Moore was seated on her other hand. The dinner started off with light conversation and laughter, but presently Anne and Edgar found themselves talking about music.

"In what kind of music do you find most enjoyment?" asked Anne.

"All depends on my mood," said Edgar. "An hour or two ago I'd have chosen a 'Humoresque' lightly played on a piano, but now I could tolerate a whole symphony orchestra in something more soulful."

Anne's eyes were full of surprised inquiry at his mention of the "Humoresque," but just at that moment the architect spoke to her.

"Mrs. Mason tells me you are domiciled at the new Selkirk studios, my pet architectural achievement of the year," was his half comment, half question.

"Yes," answered Anne and Edgar in the same breath. Then they looked at each other in wide-eyed bewilderment, which slowly gave way to understanding.

"So you are my musical neighbor?" he almost gasped. "I offer my profound apologies for my execrable singing, which was pure rapture poorly expressed over my escape from boarding-house life to a place I was able to make a bit homelike."

"Since you didn't know my name was Anne, I suppose I must forgive you," she replied blushing. Then the architect once more claimed their attention.

"As I recall the plan of that building," he chuckled, "it will be a simple matter to cut a door between adjoining apartments in case more space should be required."

A few months later the alteration was made.
